Did you know?

The colour of tags used on cattle is defined by the property of birth and previous tag loss.

- Breeder tags are white and are used to permanently identify cattle before they leave their property of birth.
- Post-breeder tags are orange and are used to permanently identify introduced livestock not already identified with an electronic tag, or that have lost their original tag.

When purchasing and applying NLIS cattle devices, it is important to remember:

- All NLIS accredited devices will have the NLIS logo printed on them. Cattle devices will also have the words 'Do not remove' on the male button.
- Tags purchased for use on one property must not be applied to cattle located on another property unless the parcel of land is linked to the identified PIC.
- Cattle tags must not be used to identify any other livestock species (such as sheep, goats, alpacas and pigs).
- Tags must not be removed without approval or exemption from state or territory departments of agriculture.
